

Mid-Century Modern Color Favorites

Creating a room within your home to represent your love of the mid-century modern design style requires the right colors. Of course, for those looking to buy an actual mid-century modern home, finding one with the right color palette may be important. Here's a quick look at some of the most popular mid-century modern colors.

Behr Bitter Lemon

If you want to nail the mid-century modern color palette, you really cannot skip Behr bitter lemon. This color is one of the most popular as it's a muted green with a touch of gold. This specific mid-century modern color goes well with avocado, gold, warm red and wheat.

Restless Olive SW 6425 from Sherwin-Williams

Another very popular color to bring your home back into the mid-century modern era is this olive color from Sherwin-Williams. It's just like a green olive and works great with many colors. It can even be used as a neutral color and works well as an accent wall.

Other mid-century modern colors pair well with restless olive, such as dark brown, burnt orange and gold. Use it to create the perfect foyer or for an entire olive-green room.

Yellow Gold 360D-6 from Behr

Offering a warm gold color, yet a bit more complex than the Harvest Gold many used in the 1960s, Behr's Yellow Gold pairs well with many other mid-century modern colors. It's perfect for those looking to create a color palette with warm tones.

Blue Seafoam 2056-60 from Benjamin Moore

You cannot create a list of mid-century modern colors without adding a touch of turquoise or aqua. This blue seafoam color offers a true ode to the 1950s, yet allows you to feel like you live in the 21st century. It pairs well with many neutral colors and offers a way to brighten up any room.

General Mid-Century Modern Colors

While the colors listed above all fit within the mid-century modern design palette, they are very specific. Let's look at a few more general colors to choose if you want to create a mid-century modern look within your home.

Red

Using bright reds will pay homage to the 1950s and 1960s well, but you only want to use pops of red. If you dare to use a shade of red called "Cherokee Red" you will be using the favorite red shade of Frank Lloyd Wright.

Golden Yellow

Several shades of golden yellow offer a great compliment for any contemporary mid-century modern design. Bright closet doors were very popular and often painted in a golden yellow color.

Earthy Browns

With the right shade of brown, bringing back the mid-century modern design becomes much easier. When using wood veneers and furniture, adding earthy brown colors may be the perfect compliment.

Several colors, such as aqua, wasabi, pewter grey, orange, ochre, tangerine, and pink all fit within the mid-century modern color palette. Choosing your favorites may not be easy, but once you do, you'll be able to create the perfect mid-century modern look within your home.
